

Humans Celebrate the 10 Year Anniversary of Logania with Historic Fireworks

After 100 Years of Peace, the First Nation in 5,000 Years Celebrates Their Founding by Rediscovering fun-filled explosives

100 years ago, the zombie harbinger Lil' Red Devil, Harbinger of the Crossroads finished her last attack on the former Utah State University. From that siege, one person survived, a man known only to the oral histories as JHam.

Heart broken, Salty, Harbinger of Life, escorted JHam to the nearest human settlement and disappeared, never to be seen again.

That settlement worked and waited for the next zombie attack, surviving as best they could, but the Devil never came. After a few decades of peace and prosperity, word of Logania spread far and wide. Refugees flocked to the surrounding area. It took 40 years to fill the valley and create the thriving society we live in today.

As the population grew, not only did Logania begin trading with other settlements, but farming techniques became complex enough to allow for academics, who studied the zombie threat, history, and music.

Ten years ago today, the first constitution in five thousand years was ratified, which united Logania under a democracy with a congress and president. In those early years, President Tumnus served us well as our first president. Today Yellow was elected as the second president of Logania.

We celebrate the official founding of Logania with rediscovered "fireworks" explosions used to entertain with bright flashes of light. Yellow suggests viewing the fireworks from hills or mountains that overlook the valley. The noise will be loud, but there is no reason to be afraid. The authorities assure us that everything is safe. Said Ghostie, head of community celebrations, "The noise is part of the excitement, but the fireworks are fired harmlessly into the air. We have quite the show lined up for you."

As we celebrate with our parades and fireworks, let us never forget the intrepid founders of our young nation that allowed us to live a life of safety, free from massive hordes, which allow us to write this: the first newspaper in five thousand years.

LONG LIVE LOGANIA!

A new harbinger, going by the name Survivor is recruiting humans for what he claims is a heroic mission. More on page 4.

What happened to the Red Devil and why we haven't heard of her in 100 years. On page 2.

The first comic strip on page 5!